

Information for Passengers with Food Allergies

Starting in September 2026, information regarding allergens on specified ingredients, such as dairy products and eggs, will be included in the in-flight menus for snacks served on international flights.

We ask that passengers with food allergies carefully review the menu before consuming any food items.

Information for Passengers with Peanut Allergies

On all Star Flyer domestic and international flights, the snacks, beverages, and other items served on board do not contain peanuts or products made with peanuts.

However, we ask for your understanding regarding the following points.

Possibility of Contamination during the Manufacturing Process

Allergens may contaminate food during the manufacturing process.

Regarding Other Passengers Bringing Items Onboard

Other passengers are not prohibited from bringing peanuts or similar products onto the flight, so it is not possible to completely eliminate peanuts from the cabin environment.

Important Information to Keep in Mind before Boarding

Passengers with severe allergies should consult their primary care physician before boarding. We also recommend wearing a mask if necessary and carrying prescription medications and emergency medications, such as EpiPen[®], with you.

We do not guarantee that the cabin will be a completely peanut-free or allergens-free environment. We ask that you make your own preparations and decisions accordingly.
